Abstract

JV-Campus is an all-Japan online education platform that functions as an international gateway for higher education in Japan. Over 80 institutions from both Japan and abroad participate, offering more than 500 pieces of content. These resources are being used in innovative ways, such as delivering micro-credential programs to learners around the world and creating packages that combine classroom sessions and credit awards, turning them into university-level courses. This initiative marks the emergence of a new educational model that utilizes cloud-based educational resources. This session will explore this growing trend of deploying Japanese online education resources in international contexts.
